- 8 Pen and Sword
The Symbiosis between Ernest Hemingway and Maj. Gen. Buck Lanham
Eileen Martin
Greer Rising
The writer and the soldier forged a friendship that lasted their entire lives, and their unique collaboration of pen and sword enriched the literary world and the profession of arms.
- 17 Low Crawling toward Obscurity
The Army's Professional Journals
Maj. Zachary Griffiths, U.S. Army
The Army's professional publications must modernize toward web-first platforms to reach soldiers where they are, and the Army should consider modest incentives for writing and editing professional military publications.
- 29 Reimagining America's Professional All-Volunteer Army
Lt. Gen. James M. Dubik, PhD, U.S. Army, Retired
Lt. Gen. Lawson W. Magruder III, U.S. Army, Retired
Our Nation is in a multipolar, great-power period, and it is time to reexamine, perhaps even reimagine, the relationship between America's Army—Active, Guard, and Reserve—and the contextual conditions that shape it.
- 44 Lack of Will
How the All-Volunteer Force Conditioned the American Public
Maj. Christopher J. Parker, U.S. Army
Despite its investment in personnel, fifty years of the all-volunteer force has conditioned much of the American public to eschew military service while simultaneously enabling wars of want that have, in turn, only reinforced public skepticism about military service.
- 57 Four Minutes to Make a Leader
Maj. James Cowen, British Army
The principles of transformational leadership grow in importance when it comes to defining an organizational vision and setting a culture. This article was awarded first place in the General Douglas MacArthur Military Leadership Writing Competition.
- 64 The 11th Airborne Division Reborn Arctic Angels
Maj. Gen. Brian S. Eifler, U.S. Army
Natalie M. Hardy
The 11th Airborne Division, reactivated in 2022, is capable of operating in the Arctic, in mountainous terrain, and in other extreme cold weather areas while maintaining readiness for global deployments.
- 73 Russians Are Busy Hammering Out Their "Ideology of the Future"
Dr. Robert F. Baumann
The new ideology put forth by Russian leaders in light of their struggles during Russia's "special military operation" in Ukraine provides a useful lens through which to understand the ambitions of the Putin government.
- 87 Xi Jinping's PLA Reforms and Redefining "Active Defense"
Capt. Scott J. Tosi, U.S. Army Reserve
China is making great efforts to downsize, professionalize, restructure existing command relationships, and enable joint operations within the People's Liberation Army.

107 Data Centricity and the 1st Cavalry Division's "Speed of Relevance" during Warfighter 23-04

Maj. Thomas D. Richardson, U.S. Army

The 1st Cavalry Division demonstrated the significance of data centricity in conducting multidomain operations during a recent Warfighter exercise. This article was awarded first place in the Armed Forces Communications & Electronics Association Writing Contest.

116 Pistol-Packing Padres Rethinking Regulations Prohibiting Armed Military Chaplains

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Joseph Friedman, Colorado Air National Guard

The Department of Defense's insistence on unarmed chaplains must be reconsidered. Just as medical personnel are authorized to carry defensive weapons, so should chaplains.

128 Comedy in Combat Culture Understanding the Use of Humor in Crisis and Conflict

Maj. Sally Williamson, Australian Army

Appropriate humor can serve as a useful tool for interpersonal and informative communication, transcend traditional hierarchies, serve as a culturally acceptable mechanism for voicing dissatisfaction, and act as an effective coping strategy in crisis and conflict. This article was awarded second place in the General Douglas MacArthur Military Leadership Writing Competition.

136 Rear Detachment Operations through a Project Management Framework

Maj. Aaron F. Anderson, U.S. Army

Rear detachment operations are critical to units during and after deployments, but there is limited current doctrine dedicated to the topic. One industry that can provide a framework for rear detachment operations is project management.
